

Professor Faulkner honored for service to U-M and Medical School

John Faulkner, Ph.D., was honored for his 49 years at U-M at a surprise luncheon recently at the U-M Alumni Center. Faulkner, the longest-serving active faculty member of the Medical School, was celebrated by friends and colleagues from the university and the American Physiological Society. He was given a Lifetime Service Award from the university and a proclamation by the APS honoring his work. Faulkner is a senior research scientist for the Institute of Gerontology and professor of physiology. Remarks were given by President Mary Sue Coleman, Dean James Woolliscroft, Bishr Omary, M.D., professor and chair, Department of Molecular and Integrative Physiology, former U-M football coach Lloyd Carr and representatives from APS.

John Faulkner (left) talks with former U-M football coach Lloyd Carr and President Mary Sue Coleman