The Michigan Health Sciences Career Development Academy

is an eight-week residential program sponsored by the University of Michigan Health System's (UMHS) Office for Health Equity and Inclusion (OHEI) for current sophomores to recent graduates attending any accredited college or university. The Academy focuses on preparing participants for the extensive process of applying and gaining admission into medical school.

MICHIGAN HEALTH SCIENCES SUMMER INSTITUTE

The Michigan Health Sciences Summer Institute prepares high school students, undergraduate students, and recent college graduates to become leaders in the field of health sciences. The Institute is comprised of three residential academies that expose students to health sciences careers and health disparities; foster leadership development, enhance academic skills and prepares them for admission to medical school. A distinctive feature of the Michigan Health Sciences Institute is a half-day health disparities conference that convenes participants from the three academies and students attending other summer enrichment programs on the UM campus. The conference’s aim is to stimulate an interest and commitment to combating health disparities.
