

Do I need a breast pump?

If you are planning to feed your baby breast milk, we would like you to get a personal, electric breast pump.

To get your breast pump, follow these steps:

- At a prenatal doctor's visit, between 32 and 34 weeks, ask your doctor for a breast pump prescription.
- When you have the signed prescription, call your health insurance provider and ask if they will cover a breast pump before you have your baby.
- If the answer is yes:
 - Ask your health insurance provider which durable medical equipment supplier you should call to order your pump.
 - If they do not give you a name, see the list of durable medical equipment suppliers.
 - Call the durable medical equipment supplier, give them the prescription information and order your breast pump.
- If the answer is no:
 - When you are in the hospital to have your baby, let your nurse know that you need a breast pump.
